MILK.

The following extract is made from a paper contributed by G. C. Frankland to the Septemher number of the Ninclosuth Century:-Knowing as we do that bacteria flourish and multiply abundantly in this rich fluid, it ought not to surprise us to learn that milk as we receive it contains engrinous numbers of microbes; that one investigator, for example, found ag many us 960,000 to 1,600,000 per cubic inch. or, in other words, from thirty-three to fifty-six millions per pint. There is not much difficulty in surmising from what sources this vast microbial population is obtained if we recall the conditions under which the process of milking is carried on: The stifling atmosphere of the milking shed rich in germ life, the carelossness which provails as regards cleanliness, not only in the condition of the animals themselves, but only too frequently in those entrusted with the milking of them, the impure water used in the washing of the vessels, &o. If we consider again the number of hands through which milk passes before it is finally placed on our tables, it is surely not astonishing to find it so abundantly supplied with germ life. We have pointed out that once provided with rach a rich dies as milk, the fortunate microbe will thrive abundantly; the following instance will, however, give some approximate idea of what this thriving really means. A sample of milk was collected and found to contain 153,000 bacteria in a cubic inch; it was put on one side and kept at a constant temperature of 59 deg. Fahr, one bour later it was examined and found to contain 539,750 bacteria; at the end of seven hours the process was repeated, and 1,020,000 were discovered; whilst after the lapse of twenty-five hours as many as 85,000,000 were present per cubic inch.

The multiplication of baoteria in milk goes on even more rapidly if the temperature of the engrounding air is somewhat raised; thus another sample of milk was collected and found to contain 391,000 bacteria per cabic inch; twenty-four hours later, during which time it had been kept at a temperature of 77 deg. Fahr., there were 13,702,000,000 bacteric prosent per cubic inch! But it may be urged that these germs are not necessarily capable of producing disease or dangerous to health. Quite so, but on the other hand what guarantee have we that amongst all this multitude of germs those associated with discuso will not also obtain access to milk ?- That they do find their way into milk has been moreover, proved over and over again, and the responsibility of communicating scarlet fever, typhoid fever, diphtheria, and tuberculosis are only some of the heavy charges which have justifiably been brought up in connection with our milk samplies. Moreover, there is the strongest receou to bulieve that the gastrio and intestinal disturbances, so common in young infants during the summer months; are due to the presence of certain formenting organisms in milk which, fayoured by the higher temperature, multiply most abundantly, elaborating products of a highly poisonous character. As regards tuberpalosis and milk our information is perhaps more precise, for a large number of investigations have been successfully carried out on this subject, and it is now known that bacteria may not only obtain access to milk through the employment of persons suffering from tuberculosis in the dairy, but that the source of infection may be, and often is, the cow

Recent research has shown that cows may be affected with tubercular disease in cases where the udder appears to be perfectly healthy, and that animals thus affected are capable of infectme the milk derived from them with the germs of tubercular disease.

The mususpected existence of tuborcular disuser in cows, and its transmission to other animals fed with their milk has been shown in a striking manner in the investigations carried out and just published by the Massachusetts Society for the Promotion of Agriculture. In one case as many as over 33 per cent, of the calves fed with milk from tuberculous cows succumbed to the same disease. According to Hirschberger, 10 per cent of the cows living in the neighbourhood of towns where the conditions of their environment are not generally the most tatisfactory or conducive to health suffer from tuberculous, and 50 per cent of these animals ield milk containing taborcle bacilli.

It is sufficiently obvious what a source of langer such milk is more especially as it has been proved that tubercle bacilli can live for apwards of 120 days in butter and over thirtyfive days in cheese! In 1890 a Royal Commistion was appointed to inquire and report upon "What is the effect, if any, of food derived from tuberculous animals on human health?" The results of the inquiries instituted by the commissioners were presented to Parliament a few months ago. In the summary appended to the report we read ;-" Tubercalous matter in milk is exceptionally active in its operation upon animals fed either with the milk or with dairy produce derived from it. No doubt the largest part of the tuberculesis which man obtains through his food is by means of milk containing tuberculous matter." More and more attention is being directed to the importance of cleanly milking and the observance of other bygienic considerations in Some ides of how imperative such precautions are may be enthered from investigations recently made on the milk supply of Berlin, for Dr. Backhaus has estimated that this city alone consumes daily with its milk 300 cwt. of cow-
